

WAKE UP FDA

800-Pound Metal Heroin Spoon Dropped Outside HHS Building in D.C.

Recovery activists protest the FDA's irresponsible opioid approvals, demand focus on recovery

WASHINGTON, D.C. – April 5, 2019 – Recovery Reform NOW, along with The Opioid Spoon Project (OSP), Prescription Addiction Intervention Now (P.A.I.N.), and Team Sharing, held an action today in front of the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) in Washington, D.C. where they dropped an 800-pound metal spoon stamped with the logo of the Food and Drug Administration (FDA). The spoon, created by activist/artist Domenic Esposito of The Opioid Spoon Project, protests the FDA's recent approvals of new, exceptionally powerful opioid painkillers and lack of action in approving and bringing to market new innovative recovery medications.

"The FDA's irresponsible actions in response to the opioid crisis are both inexplicable and dangerous," said Wake Up FDA spokesperson Ryan Hampton, recovery activist, founder of The Voices Project and author of American Fix: Inside the Opioid Addiction Crisis – and How to End It. "Defying recommendations from its own advisory board members and other experts, the FDA continues to approve dangerous opioids that will wind up diverted while limiting access to recovery medications that would fill gaps in care. We demand transparency and accountability, and we call on the FDA to address the opioid crisis with the urgency it deserves."

Recovery Reform NOW, a policy watchdog organization that works to improve public policy on addiction and recovery, started the Wake Up FDA campaign in response to the FDA's recent approvals of powerful and dangerous opioids—such as the November 2018 approval of Dsuvia—against expert advice. Additionally, Wake Up FDA demands that more recovery medications to fill treatment gaps and keep people in long-term recovery be made available immediately.

"Not only do we need to prevent more people from becoming addicted to opioids, but we need to make sure that people who are living with addiction have the resources they need to recover," said Team Sharing founder Cheryl Juare. "On behalf of parents around the country who have lost a child to addiction, we call on the FDA to make available every possible recovery tool. It's a matter of life and death."

In a public letter to President Trump and HHS Secretary Alex Azar, the campaign called on the administration to take FDA Commissioner Scott Gottlieb's resignation as an opportunity to shift the FDA's opioid crisis efforts to focus on recovery. Specifically, Wake Up FDA calls on President Trump and Secretary Azar to nominate a new commissioner who understands recovery and the FDA's role in addressing the public health impact of the opioid crisis.

"We will continue to show up and hold everyone who is complicit in the opioid crisis accountable," said artist and activist Nan Goldin, founder of P.A.I.N. "We will continue to call out those who must do more to address this suffering. Today, it's the FDA. We will continue to put pressure on the FDA until they meet our demands.”

Over the last year, The Opioid Spoon Project has dropped off several 800-pound metal spoons at the locations of various parties who are culpable for the opioid crisis.

“The spoon sculpture—engraved with the FDA’s logo—signifies the responsibility the FDA bears in first causing and now fixing this urgent national health crisis,” said Esposito, OSP founder. “We deliver customized spoon sculptures to show those responsible that the recovery community and the general public are watching and will not rest until everyone steps up and cooperates in ending this crisis.”
